Project Description

For a government agency in a town like Key West, it's vital for their office to feel as vibrant as the community itself. Reception furniture plays a critical role in enhancing the guest and employee experience—especially when it can offer the performance of traditional systems furniture with the look and shape of custom built-ins. When a dealer partner enlisted our help to create several custom desks for Key West City Hall, we were ready for the challenge (and sunshine!). These desks included a 50-foot-long registration desk, the City Hall Chambers desks, and a security desk.

Process

The dealer leading the project had already outfitted the entire facility with office furniture, but they needed our help executing specialized pieces that required curves that standard products simply can't support. And because the client wanted a simple installation to open on time and without hassle, they asked us to deliver and install the components.

Solution

Building a 50-foot-long registration desk is challenging for most vendors. But given our expertise with modular construction methods, StudioCraft was able to manufacture the design on budget and on time. Working in our shop, we produced the desk in eight-foot sections to fit the exact profile of a matching soffit. This streamlined delivery, allowing us to efficiently pack and ship the large desk. Installation was simple as well. We bolted the sections together and seamed the Corian transaction tops. The stations were already powered up and ready to go.

The construction of this desk was highly technical because we had to build it on an inverse curve. The result, however, is spectacular. The grand reception desk is emphasized by a town placard on display behind it, along with beautifully restored heart-of-pine floors. Together, these elements create a warm, welcoming experience for all who enter Key West City Hall. And, the desk itself is a wonderful testament to how StudioCraft enhances a dealer's ability to be a single furniture source for clients.
