How StudioCraft Helped a Healthcare Provider
Create More Productive Nurses Stations

Project Description

For nurses and clinicians, an efficient workflow is non-negotiable. Every element of the work experience, from technology to the space layout to the furniture, must work in concert to enable seamless, high-quality care. To help two Mt. Carmel healthcare facilities achieve the highest level of productivity possible, we paired with a dealer partner and created custom nurses stations.

Process

Our dealer partner enlisted our help with this project because of our shared success on previous builds. Together we ideated with the architects, giving them confidence that we could make their design vision a reality.

As part of this vision, the architects sought nurses stations with the custom look of millwork and the performance of systems furniture. They also wanted to vary the level of each station's customization based on its prominence in the space layout. The goal was to dial in the best possible experience for staff and guests.

Solution

The portfolio of solutions we provided included Y-shaped, 120-degree nurses stations that achieve the look of millwork with an infrastructure of systems furniture. Custom features include Corian tops and side panels, stainless steel footrails and metal trim.

We also fulfilled the architect's desire to scale the level of customization for each station. More prominent desks received additional enhancements, while stations that are tucked away have simpler designs. By taking this approach, we helped the dealer and architect create a cohesive design at a lower cost.
